La Traviata.

The story upon which "La Traviata" is based is that of the book and play "La Dame aux Camélias" of the younger Dumas, the story which is familiar to the English stage under the name of "Camille." The three acts of the opera present the principal incidents of the play and book. A gay party is in progress in the house of Violetta (Marguerite Gauthier in the original story), a Parisian courtesan. Alfredo, a young man of respectable Provençal family, who loves the woman, joins in the merry-making; his love is passionate and earnest, and is met by the love of Violetta, who at his solicitation agrees to abandon her dissolute life and live with him alone. In Act II the pair are found housed in the suburbs of Paris. Alfredo learns that Violetta has sold her city property to maintain their country home, and goes to Paris to recover it; he returns to find his companion gone. In his absence Germont, Alfredo's father, had visited her and persuaded her, by appeals to her love and sympathy for his son, to abandon him. She returns to her old life in the city. There, at a ball given by one of her associates, Alfredo finds her again, overwhelms her with reproaches, and ends a scene of excitement by denouncing her publicly and throwing his gambling gains at her feet. In the last act Violetta dies in the arms of her lover, who had learned of her sacrifice for his family and hurried to her side to find her in the last stages of consumption.

Dumas, in the preface to his romance, says that the main incidents of the story are true, and it is said that Dickens had it in his mind to write a novel on the subject before Dumas. The facts, while they may be interesting from a biographical point of view, have no bearing on the moral and æsthetic questions raised by the opera, which have remained open for over forty years, despite the popularity won by Verdi's music. Dumas's book appeared in 1848, his play in 1852. Verdi saw the latter in Paris while it was new, and, though he was at work at the time on "Il Trovatore," he laid out the plan of "La Traviata" and sent it to Piave, the librettist who had written the books of "Ernani," "I due Foscari," "Macbeth," "Il Corsaro," "Stiffelio" and "Rigoletto" for him. The composer's creative capacity was at its high-water mark, and his eagerness and energy are illustrated in the fact that he worked concurrently on the two operas. "Il Trovatore" was produced at Rome on January 19, 1853, and "La Traviata" less than seven weeks later, on March 6, 1853, at the Fenice Theatre, Venice. He wrote the music within a month, according to the evidence of the autograph, which is in the possession of the publisher, Ricordi. Eighteen operas from Verdi's pen had preceded "La Traviata," and the sun of his fame stood at its zenith, yet the opera failed lamentably on its first production. The reason? Verdi seems to have known it, in part, at least. On the day after the first performance he wrote to his friend and pupil Salvini-Muzio: "'La Traviata' last night a failure. Was the fault mine or the singers'? Time will tell;" but when Varesi, the singer who had been entrusted with the part of Germont, which he thought beneath his dignity, came to him and offered his condolences, Verdi declined to receive them. "Make them to yourself and your companions, who have not understood my music," he said. This does not seem to have been an altogether accurate description of the case. Graziani, the tenor, was hoarse and could not sing well, and Verdi exacted, perhaps, more than he ought when he wanted Signora Donatelli to overcome the absurdity of the stage-picture by the illusive power of her singing. The lady was monstrously stout, and the contradictions in the death-scene of the last act appealed too strongly to the Venetian sense of humor to permit the best of Verdi's dramatic accents to have the effect which had filled his fancy. The opera ended with shrieks of laughter when the too generously upholstered Violetta was heard to declare that she was on the edge of a consumptive's grave. Moreover, the public found amusement in the circumstance that the personages of the opera were clad in conventional modern dress. This led to a revision, in which costumes and stage-furniture belonging to an earlier century (it is not well to try to be explicit in such matters) were substituted for those of fifty years ago. Thus, revised as to its dress and with a few changes in the score, the opera was launched again in the same city after the lapse of about a year, and set out on its successful voyage around the world. It reached London on May 24, 1856; St. Petersburg, November 1, 1856; New York, December 3, 1856, and Paris, December 6, 1856. Piccolomini, who had enacted the rôle of Violetta in Turin in 1855, chose it for her début in London, and to her personality, and possibly also to other extraneous causes, the prompt and emphatic triumph of the opera, in spite of the judgment of the critics, was due.

"La Traviata" belongs to those dramatic works which, on their first appearance, cause more discussion because of their subject-matter than their artistic excellence. Whether the anathema pronounced against them by individual and official censorship helps or hinders the growth of these works into popularity, I shall not attempt to say. There can scarcely be a doubt, however, that many latter-day theatrical managers would hail with pleasure and expectation of profit such a controversy as greeted "La Traviata" in London. The Lord Chamberlain had refused to sanction the English adaptations of "La Dame aux Camélias," and when the opera, based on the play, was brought forward, pulpit and press thundered in denunciation of it. Mr. Lumley, manager of Her Majesty's Theatre, came to the defence of the work in a letter to the all-powerful Times newspaper, but his purpose was plainly more to encourage the popular excitement and irritate curiosity than to shield the opera from condemnation. Indeed, he had every reason to be contented. "La Traviata" had made a complete fiasco on its production in Italy, where no one dreamed of objecting to its story; in London there was a loud outcry against the "foul and hideous horrors of the book," and the critics found little to praise in its music, yet the opera scored a tremendous popular success and helped rescue Her Majesty's from threatened ruin. "Once more frantic crowds struggled in the lobbies of the theatre," writes Mr. Lumley in his "Reminiscences"; "once more dresses were torn and hats crushed in the conflict; once more a mania possessed the public." Was it the music alone? That is scarcely to be believed, for the opera was not well sung, and the critical taste of the English, as voiced by their writers for the press, was opposed to the strenuous style of Signor Verdi. Was it the libretto? Alas! who cared much for the libretto of an opera then, and who could have gone to the opera for the sake of so badly diluted a play, sung, moreover, in a foreign tongue! The fact that the language was Italian, robbed the opera of whatever charm it might have had for those who would have found pleasure in the odor of moral decay. Plainly, the success of "La Traviata" in London was chiefly due to Marietta Piccolomini, who effected her English début in it. It is an amusing chapter which this winsome little lady contributed to the history of opera during her brief career. Two years later she became as much of a rage in New York as she had been in London; yet she was in no sense a great singer. A bewitching personality and ingenious advertising were her conquering arms. She belonged to the ancient Italian nobility. It was given out that the family was one which dated back to the time of Charlemagne, and had given two popes and a cardinal to the Church, to say nothing of the hero of the second drama in Schiller's "Wallenstein" trilogy. Here was brave advertising material, and right bravely was it exploited. The charming little woman, who had a weak mezzo-soprano voice, limited in range to an octave and a half, little or no execution, and uncertain intonation; who, Mr. Chorley would have us believe, was little better than a comedy soubrette, a vaudeville singer, "a Columbine, born 'to make eyes' over an apron with pockets," compelled success for "Traviata" in the city where success was least to have been expected. "Her best appearance was in 'La Traviata,'" wrote Mr. Chorley in summing up the season of 1856 at Her Majesty's Theatre. "The music of the first act pleased, perhaps, because it is almost the solitary act of gay music from the composer's pen; and her effrontery of behaviour passed for being dramatically true to the character, and not, as it afterward proved, her habitual manner of accosting the public. In the repulsive death-act, too, she had one or two good moments of serious emotion, though this was driven at times to the verge of caricature, as when every clause of her last song was interrupted by the cough which belongs to the character."

There is no reason to question the correctness of this judgment by the critic of The Athenaeum. A different Violetta was disclosed when Bosio sang the part in London, when Patti made it scintillant with gems of vocalization, and even when Christine Nilsson chose a new French adaptation of the opera for her public début in Paris on October 27, 1864. Verdi's music had won the French capital so completely in 1856 that Scudo despaired of Italy's musical futuré, because of the "prodigious success" of "La Traviata." The circumstances surrounding the production of the opera in New York did not permit many repetitions of it. There had been a destructive competition between Mr. Max Maretzek's Italian company at the Academy of Music and a German company at Niblo's Garden. The regular Italian season had been brought to an end by a quarrel between Mr. Maretzek and the directors of the Academy of Music, but the troupe returned to give a brief season under the style of the La Grange Opera Company, before proceeding to Havana. In this interregnum "La Traviata" was given, and concerning its reception I cannot do better than to quote at some length the criticism which appeared on December 5 in the New York Tribune newspaper:

"The plot of 'La Traviata' we have already given to our readers. It is simply 'Camille.' The first scene affords us some waltzing music, appropriate in its place, on which a (musical) dialogue takes place. The waltz is not specially good, nor is there any masterly out-working of detail. A fair drinking song was afforded, which pleased but was not encored. A pretty duet, by Mad. de la Grange and Signor Brignoli, may be noticed also in this act; and the final air by Mad. de la Grange, 'Ah fors'è lui che l'anima,' contained a brilliant, florid close, which brought down the house, and the curtain had to be re-raised to admit of a repetition. Act II. admits of more intensified music than Act I. A brief air by Alfred (Brignoli) is followed by an air by Germont (Amodio), and by a duet, Violetta (La Grange) and Germont. The duet is well worked up, and is rousing, passionate music. Verdi's mastery of dramatic accent—of the modern school of declamation—is here evident. Some dramatic work, the orchestra leading, follows—bringing an air by Germont, 'Di Provenza il mar.' This is a 2-4 travestie of the waltz known as 'Weber's Last Waltz' (which, however, Weber never wrote); and is too uniform in the length of its notes to have dramatic breadth or eloquence. A good hit is the sudden exit of Alfred thereupon, not stopping to make an andiamo duet, as is so often done. It is dramatic. The next scene introduces us to a masquerade, where are choruses of quasi-gypsies, matadors, and picadors—sufficiently characteristic. The scene after the card playing, which is so fine in the play, is inefficient in music. Act III. in the book (though it was made Act IV. on this occasion by subdividing the second) reveals the sick-room of La Traviata. A sweet air—minor and major by turns, with some hautboy wailing—paints the sufferer's sorrows. A duet by the lovers, 'Parige, o cara,' is especially original in its peroration. The closing trio has due culmination of anguish, though we would have preferred a quiet ending to a hectic shriek and a doubly loud force in the orchestra.

"Goldsmith's rule in the Vicar for criticising a painting was always to say that 'the picture would have been better if the painter had taken more pains.' Perhaps the same might be said of 'La Traviata'; but whether it would have pleased the public more is another question. Some of the airs certainly would bear substitution by others in the author's happier vein. The opera was well received. Three times the singers were called before the curtain. The piece was well put upon the stage. Mad. La Grange never looked so well. Her toilet was charming."

(They approach the centre door, when Violetta, suddenly turning pale, cries:)

Sheet music for a vocal part (Soprano) and piano accompaniment. The vocal part consists of ten staves of music, each containing lyrics. The piano accompaniment is shown below the vocal staves.

The lyrics are:

- Ohi - me!
A - las!
- Nul - la,
No - thing,
- Che a - ve - te?
What ails thee?
- Che a - ve - te?
What ails thee?

What ails thee?
- Che a - ve - te?
What ails thee?
- Che a - ve - te?
What ails thee?

The piano accompaniment is indicated by a treble clef, a bass clef, and a key signature of one flat (B-flat major). The music includes various dynamics like forte and piano, and rests.

The musical score consists of five systems of music. System 1: Vocal part for 'Voice' (soprano) and 'Piano'. The piano part includes dynamic markings like 'str.'. The vocal line starts with a question about Alfred's whereabouts. System 2: Vocal part for 'Annina' and 'Violetta'. The vocal line continues the question about Alfred. System 3: Vocal part for 'Joseph' and 'Violetta'. The vocal line discusses Violetta's expectations for the morning. System 4: Vocal part for 'Violetta' only, showing her reaction to the letter she has just opened. System 5: Vocal part for 'Violetta' only, showing her continued reaction and a final line about waiting for Alfred.

Nº13. "Di Madride noi siam mattadori,,.
Chorus of Spanish Matadors.

(Gaston and others, disguised as Spanish Matadors and Picadors, rush in R.H.)

Allegro assai mosso.

The musical score consists of ten staves of music. The first staff is for the Piano, marked 'Tutti' and 'ff'. The second staff is for the Bass. The third staff is for the Tenor. The fourth staff is for the Bass. The fifth staff is for the Tenor. The sixth staff is for the Bass. The seventh staff is for the Tenor. The eighth staff is for the Bass. The ninth staff is for the Tenor. The tenth staff is for the Bass. The vocal parts sing in three-part harmony. The lyrics are in Italian and English, describing the matadors coming from Madrid to Paris for the bull-fights. The piano part provides a rhythmic foundation with sustained notes and chords.

The musical score consists of six staves. The top staff is for Gaston, followed by Alfred, then the Baron. Below them are the Doctor, Marquis, and a Chorus of three voices. The piano accompaniment is shown at the bottom. The vocal parts have lyrics in both French and English. The music includes various dynamics like forte and piano, and rhythmic patterns like eighth-note chords.

This musical score page from Act II, Scene 1, features five systems of music. The first system shows three staves: soprano, alto, and bass. The second system begins with a soprano solo, identified by a 'Violetta.' label above the staff. The third system continues with a soprano solo. The fourth system introduces a piano accompaniment, indicated by a 'Wind sustain' instruction. The fifth system concludes with a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts sing in Italian, with lyrics provided for each section. The score is set against a background of a garden scene with a path, trees, and a building.

A musical score page featuring three staves. The top staff is for Ahmalcauto, who sings "Ah malcauto ve-gliardo! il mal chio fe-ci, o-ra sol ve-do!" in a forte dynamic. The middle staff is for Chio, singing "Ill-advised my pre-cau-tions! too late I feel it, I've foul-ly wrong'd her!" in a dim. dynamic. The bottom staff is for Violetta, whose part begins with "Piu a me t'ap-pres-sa, a-scol-ta, a-ma-to Al-fre-do: Ah come, draw near-er, and hear me;".

Violetta.

The musical score continues with Violetta's song. Alfred enters with the line "Prendi, quest'e l'im-ma-gi-ne de' Al-fred, re-ceive this part-ing gift, The". The piano accompaniment features a prominent bass line with eighth-note chords. The vocal line concludes with "colla parte." followed by a piano dynamic instruction "ppp".

Andante sostenuto. (♩=56) (with a hollow voice.)

The musical score transitions to an andante sostenuto section. The vocal line continues with "Prendi, quest'e l'im-ma-gi-ne de' Al-fred, re-ceive this part-ing gift, The". The piano accompaniment consists of sustained bass notes. The vocal line then continues with "miei pas-sa-ti gior-ni, a ram-men-tar ti form of one who lov'd thee: When Heav'n hath hence re-", ending with a fermata over the piano line.

Alfred.

Alfred continues with "tor-ni co-lei che sì t'a-mò. No, non mor-rai, non mov'd me My im-age 'twill re-call. Thou shalt not die!". The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support. The vocal line then shifts to Geronte, who begins with "Ca-ra, su-Oh heart of".
